Part 4

Meals in Britain

In Britain, the important meals are breakfast in the morning, lunch at midday, and dinner in the evening. There is also tea and a snack in the afternoon.

The most important meal is breakfast. For breakfast, the British have cereals, porridge, or cornflakes, and then they have the important part of the meal: bacon and eggs, sausages with tomatoes. Then, there is toast and marmalade with tea or milk, and sometimes coffee.

For lunch they have a light meal because they eat a lot for breakfast. They usually have a sandwich, a packet of crisps, or a piece of fruit and a drink.

Mid-afternoon, they have coffee or tea with biscuits.

Dinner is a big meal at about seven in the evening. There is meat, vegetables, cheese and a cake or fruit.
